Tips for talking to your provider

Your doctors and other care providers work hard to help you stay healthy. But it might not feel that way if you're having trouble understanding each other. Before your appointment, be ready to talk about what's important to you. Read on to get started.

Make a list before your appointment

Before you visit your provider, ask yourself some questions:

- What are my health goals?
- What symptoms (signs) do I want to tell my provider about?
- Are there any other problems or concerns I want to bring up?

Write your questions on the other side of this flyer.

Make another list of the providers and specialists you have seen recently. Include the providers you're thinking about seeing, too. Give your provider this list. He or she will make sure to coordinate your care with your other providers.

Decide what you want from your visit

Next, think about what you want to get out of your visit. Tell your provider right away what you expect.

Ask what he or she expects from you. This is a great first step in taking an active role in your healthcare.

Tell your provider how much time you need for your visit. It's okay to make another appointment if you need more time to ask all of your questions.

Repeat what you hear

It can be hard to remember what your provider tells you. This is especially true when you are feeling sick or anxious. Make sure you understand by saying, "Thank you for giving me that information. Now, let me see if I understand. I heard you say . . ." It's okay to ask your providers to repeat themselves.

Take notes. After your visit, read your notes and review what you learned.

Bring a friend

It can be helpful to take a family member or friend with you when you go to your office visit. They can help remind you about things you planned to ask and remember what your provider says.

Ask for an interpreter

If you need an interpreter to help you talk with your provider, tell the office staff when you schedule your appointment.
